

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
MIDDLE DISTRICT OF FLORIDA
FORT MYERS DIVISION

KIRILL VLADIMIROVICH POPOV
(pro se),

Petitioner,

WARDEN, GLADES COUNTY DETENTION CENTER, et al. (all official capacity),¹

Respondents.

Case No. 2:26-cv-28-SPC-DNF

A No.

Russia

Response to Habeas Petition

Petitioner Kirill Vladimirovich Popov challenges his detention by U.S. Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”) and Immigration and Customs Enforcement (“ICE”) as unreasonably delayed. The Court lacks jurisdiction. Apart from that, detention during this period is reasonable and Popov has refused to cooperate with efforts to remove him. So the Court should deny the Petition.

Background

Popov is a citizen and national of Russia. (Ex. 1 at 2). He entered the United ¹ The Warden is the only appropriate Respondent. 8 U.S.C. § 2243; Rumsfeld v. Padilla, 542 U.S. 426, 434-36 (2004); Vandersnick v. Sec’y, Fla. Dep’t of Corr., No. 5:18-cv-603-SPC-PRL, 2021 WL 1020914, at *1 n.3 (M.D. Fla. Mar. 17, 2021). Any relief the Court awards should be fashioned to that within the power of the immediate custodian (i.e., the Warden) or ICE/DHS. See, e.g., Mirando Bravo v. Noem, No. 2:25-cv-1046-SPC-DNF, Doc. 8 at *3 (M.D. Fla. Dec. 5, 2025) (ordering ICE either to bring petitioner for a bond hearing or release by a specific date).

States in 2007 under a visa. (Ex. 1 at 2). Popov then overstayed that visa. (Ex. 1 at 2).

ICE placed Popov in removal proceedings, and in 2014 an immigration judge ordered him removed. (Ex. 2). In September 2025, ICE decided to execute the removal order—issuing a Form I-205, Warrant of Removal (Ex. 3), and Form I-229(a), Warning for Failure to Depart (Ex. 4).

Popov has been in ICE detention since September 27. (Doc. 1 at 2). He is currently at Glades. This challenge followed.

Certified Habeas Return

The Court has power to grants writs of habeas corpus where (among other instances) petitioner “is in custody in violation of the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States.” 28 U.S.C. § 2241(c)(3). Petitioner bears the burden to prove custody violates federal law. Whitfield v. U.S. Sec’y of State, 853 F. App’x 327, 329 (11th Cir. 2021).

An IJ ordered Popov removed. He did not appeal. So his order of removal became final. At that point, Popov was removable from the United States. The Attorney General (through her delegates) has a statutory obligation to execute that removal. 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(A), (a)(3).

ICE is detaining Popov under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(6) pending his removal. ICE is working towards executing removal. But Popov has refused to cooperate by filling out travel documentation.

The period of Popov’s detention is still well within the presumptively reasonable limits established in Zadvydas. Even if he were able to challenge detention before then,

Popov cannot show there is no SLRRFF.

Discussion

Best Respondents can tell, Popov challenges his detention under a Zadvydas theory. This claim fails. As described below, the Court has no jurisdiction. Even if it did, detention has not extended to a length creating constitutional questions; nor has Popov assisted ICE with removal.²

A. Lack of Jurisdiction

Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction. Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am., 511 U.S. 375, 377 (1994). They “possess only that power authorized by Constitution and statute.” Id. (citations omitted).

In the context of immigration habeas cases related to removal—like here—the INA divests this Court’s jurisdiction. 8 U.S.C. §§ 1252(b)(9), (g). As discussed, the Court lacks jurisdiction over Popov’s claims. Regardless of how he words the matter, Popov challenges detention to execute a final order of removal.

1. Jurisdiction Stripping Under § 1252(g)

There is no jurisdiction to review “any” claim “arising from the decision or action” to “execute removal orders.” 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g). This provision bars habeas review in federal courts when the claim arises from a decision or action to “execute” a final order of removal. Reno v. American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee (AADAC), ² To the extent that Popov challenges conditions of confinement, the Court is correct that such claims are improper in a habeas case. Brito Matom v. ICE, No. 2:25-cv-648-JES-NPM, 2025 WL 2577424, at *3 (M.D. Fla. Sept. 5, 2025).

525 U.S. 471, 482 (1999).

Courts consistently hold that § 1252(g) eliminates subject-matter jurisdiction over challenges—including constitutional claims—to an arrest or detention for the purpose of executing a final removal order. E.g., Camarena v. ICE, 988 F.3d 1268, 1273-74 (11th Cir. 2021) (“[W]e do not have jurisdiction to consider ‘any’ cause or claim brought by an alien arising from the government’s decision to execute a removal order.”); Johnson v. U.S. Attorney General, 847 F. App’x 801, 802 (11th Cir. 2021); Gupta v. McGahey, 709 F.3d 1062, 1065 (11th Cir. 2013).³ Likewise, § 1252(g) precludes review of the method by which ICE chooses to commence removal proceedings. Alvarez v. ICE, 818 F.3d 1194, 1203 (11th Cir. 2016) (“By its plain terms, the provision bars us from questioning ICE’s discretionary decisions to commence removal—and thus necessarily prevents us from considering whether the agency should have used a different statutory procedure to initiate the removal process.”).

ICE detained Popov to execute the final removal order. He is well within the presumptively reasonable period of detention (as detailed below). And ICE is in the process of executing removal. This action is an effort to interfere with or halt that legal process. The INA plainly strips the Court’s jurisdiction in these instances. 8 U.S.C.

³ See also Hamama v. Adducci, 912 F.3d 869, 874 (6th Cir. 2018) (“Under a plain reading of the text of the statute, the Attorney General’s enforcement of long-standing removal orders falls squarely under the Attorney General’s decision to execute removal orders and is not subject to judicial review.”); Tazu v. U.S. Attorney General, 975 F.3d 292, 297 (3d Cir. 2020) (“The plain text of § 1252(g) covers decisions about whether and when to execute a removal order.”); Rauda v. Jennings, 55 F.4th 773, 778 (9th Cir. 2022); E.F.L. v. Prim, 986 F.3d 959, 964–65 (7th Cir. 2021).

“When asking if a claim is barred by § 1252(g), courts must focus on the action being challenged.” Camarena, 988 F.3d at 1272 (cleaned up). Popov challenges his detention as unlawful because ICE is attempting to remove him. Without a doubt, that is a fact pattern “arising from the decision or action” to “execute removal orders.” 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g). Put different, the INA expressly strips jurisdiction.

No matter how Popov tries to dress it up, he’s challenging ICE’s decisions and actions to execute the order of removal. Westley v. Harper, No. 25-229, 2025 WL 592788, at *5 (E.D. La. Feb. 24, 2025).

The Court lacks jurisdiction for a separate reason.

2. Jurisdiction Stripping Under § 1252(b)(9)

There is no jurisdiction to review “all questions of law and fact . . . arising from any action taken or proceeding brought to remove an alien from the United States” outside a case reviewing the final removal order. 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9). This is known as the “zipper clause.” Canal A Media Holding, LLC v. USCIS, 964 F.3d 1250, 1257 (11th Cir. 2020). The zipper clause is “a jurisdictional bar where” petitioner seeks “review of an order of removal [or] the decision to seek removal.” DHS v. Regents of Univ. of Cal., 591 U.S. 1, 19 (2020) (cleaned up).

There is a single path for judicial review of removal orders—“a petition for review filed with an appropriate court of appeals.” 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(5). Reading § 1252(a)(5) and (b)(9) together, courts conclude petitioners must funnel all aspects of challenges to removal proceedings through that avenue. Nasrallah v. Barr, 590 U.S.

573, 580 (2020) (“The REAL ID Act clarified that final orders of removal may not be reviewed in district courts, even via habeas corpus, and may be reviewed only in the courts of appeals.”); see also Bonhometre v. Gonzales, 414 F.3d 442, 446 (3d Cir. 2005) (There is “clear intent to have all challenges to removal orders heard in a single forum (the courts of appeals).”).

The zipper clause encompasses more than § 1252(g). AADC, 525 U.S. at 483. Under these provisions, “most claims that even relate to removal” are improper in a district court. E.O.H.C. v. DHS, 950 F.3d 177, 184 (3d Cir. 2020). There are limitations on how broadly courts interpret the zipper clause. E.g. Canal A, 964 F.3d at 1257. But a claim obviously “arises from a removal proceeding when the parties are challenging removal proceedings.” Id. (cleaned up); see also Regents of Cal., 591 U.S. at 19.

Here, the crux of this case challenges ICE’s execution of Popov’s final removal order to stop the removal process. These are the exact claims barred by the zipper clause. 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9).

3. Conclusion of Jurisdiction Stripping

As discussed above, Popov’s claims fall squarely within the INA’s jurisdiction-stripping provisions of 8 U.S.C. §§ 1252(g) and (b)(9). The Court, therefore, lacks subject-matter jurisdiction and must dismiss.

B. Constitutionally Lawful Detention

Even if the Court disagrees with the above, it must still deny the writ. Popov cannot make a claim for unlawfully prolonged detention at this time. And regardless of any dispute, his failure to cooperate in securing travel documentation tolls any Zadvydas time. Nor can Popov show a lack of SLRRFF.

1. Zadvydas Challenge Premature

After a final removal order, an alien must be removed within ninety days—i.e., the removal period. 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1); Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678, 683 (2001). During the removal period, the alien must be detained. 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2); Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 683. An alien, however, can be detained beyond that removal period. 8 U.S.C. §§ 1231(a)(1)(C), (a)(6); Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 683. This is called a “post-removal” period. Johnson v. Guzman Chavez, 594 U.S. 523, 529 (2021).

There is no statutory limit on how long ICE can detain an alien during the post-removal period. Johnson v. Arteaga-Martinez, 596 U.S. 573, 579 (2022). Yet indefinite detention would present obvious constitutional concerns. Id. So the Supremes interpret this post-removal period to allow extended detention for “a period reasonably necessary to bring about that alien’s removal from the United States.” Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 689. In all, a reasonable length of detention “is presumptively six months.” Guzman Chavez, 594 U.S. at 529; see also Akinwale v. Ashcroft, 287 F.3d 1050, 1052 (11th Cir. 2002) (stating six-month period is inclusive of any ninety-day removal period).

If the presumptively reasonable period expires without removal, then a burden-shifting framework comes into play regarding SLRRFF. Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 689. But before that six-month period expires, any habeas challenge to the detention itself is premature. E.g., Akinwale, 287 F.3d at 1051-52; Guo Xing Song v. U.S. Attorney General, 516 F. App’x 894, 899 (11th Cir. 2013); Gozo v. Napolitano, 309 F. App’x 344, 346 (11th Cir. 2009).⁴ At bottom, “This presumptively reasonable six month period must have expired at the time of the filing of a petition.” E.g., Jiang v. Mukasey, No. 2:08-cv-773-FtM-29DNF, 2009 WL 260378, at *2 (M.D. Fla. Feb. 3, 2009) (Steele, J.); Noel v. Glades Cnty. Sheriff, No. 2:11-cv-698-FtM-29SPC, 2011 WL 6412425, at *2 (M.D. Fla. Dec. 21, 2011) (Steele, J.).

Popov has only been in detention for 132 days. He was first detained on September 27 and sued on January 12. At that point, Popov had only been detained for 108 days. Either timeline is well under the 180-day period that is presumptively reasonable. That is fatal to jurisdiction. Akinwale, 287 F.3d at 1051-52.

To contend ICE cannot detain him for the purpose of removal, as Popov does, would effectively eliminate ICE’s ability to ever remove an alien unless it does so within the presumptively reasonable timeframe. Chun Yat Ma v. Asher, No. C11-1797 MJP, 2012 WL 1432229, at *3 (Apr. 25, 2012). Zadvydas doesn’t sweep that broad. It goes without saying an alien must be detained (or otherwise in custody) to effect removal unless the alien leaves voluntarily. Popov has not left voluntarily, and ICE is attempting to remove him. If the Court accepts his position, it is unclear how ICE would be able to remove Popov—which ICE is actively working toward. But see Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U.S. 228, 235 (1896) (“We think it clear that detention or temporary confinement, as part of the means necessary to give effect to the provisions for the exclusion or expulsion of aliens, would be valid. Proceedings to exclude or expel would be vain if those accused could not be held in custody . . . while arrangements were being made for their deportation.”).

Because Popov was first detained on September 27, any Zadvydas challenge fails. E.g., Jiang, 2009 WL 260378, at *2 (“This presumptively reasonable six month period must have expired at the time of the filing of a petition.”).

ICE recognizes the Court has held the Zadvydas period is coterminous with the statutory removal and post-removal periods—meaning it can run while an alien is outside detention. Godinez Perez v. Noem, No. 2:25-cv-00429-JES-NPM, 2025 WL 2806557, at *2 (M.D. Fla. Oct. 2, 2025) (Steele, J.). What’s more, it acknowledges that Judge Chappell just made a similar conclusion. Beltran v. ICE, No. 2:25-cv-01174-SPC-NPM, 2026 WL 21252 (M.D. Fla. Jan. 5, 2026).

Respectfully, ICE disagrees based on the INA and Zadvydas itself. As three Southern District cases recently made clear, this period begins at the start of an alien’s actual detention and begins again when ICE makes a renewed effort to remove after failing long ago. Barrios v. Ripa, No. 1:25-cv-22644-GAYLES, 2025 WL 2280485 (S.D. Fla. Aug. 8, 2025) (holding claim premature and rejecting argument that aggregate prior detentions considered for Zadvydas purposes); Guerra-Castro v. Parra, No. 1:25-cv-22487-GAYLES, 2025 WL 1984300 (S.D. Fla. July 17, 2025) (holding claim premature when removal period ended in 2014); Grigorian v. Bondi, No. 25-CV-22914-RAR, 2025 WL 1895479, at *7-8 (S.D. Fla. July 8, 2025) (same for 2011). Other courts agree. Ghamelian v. Baker, No. SAG-25-02106, 2025 WL 2049981, at *4 (D. Md. July 22, 2025) (“The government is entitled to its six-month presumptive period before Petitioner’s continued § 1231(a)(6) [re-]detention poses a constitutional issue.”).

With Zadvydas, the “basic question” is “whether the detention in question exceeds a period reasonably necessary to secure removal.” Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 699. In Zadvydas, the Court “used the words ‘detain’ and ‘custody’ to refer exclusively to physical confinement and restraint.” Jennings v. Rodriguez, 583 U.S. 281, 311 (2018). Zadvydas protects against unconstitutionally indefinite detention; it did not interpret starting an imaginary detention clock based on statutory periods divorced from physical restraint. Again, to conclude the detention period started with the statutory removal time requires a corresponding finding that ICE has been unconstitutionally detaining Popov since he failed to appear at his removal proceedings. That is a factual impossibility. Yet it also imposes an impossible burden on ICE—requiring it to justify over a decade detention if the burden shifts. See Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 701 (“And for detention to remain reasonable, as the period of prior postremoval confinement grows, what counts as the ‘reasonably foreseeable future’ conversely would have to shrink.”).

Akinwale and other courts recognize that calculating time will often begin when detention is required (i.e., start of the removal period). 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(2)(A). But this would only be the case where petitioner challenges detention beginning at that time. If—as here—petitioner gets detained years later, no reasonable interpretation of Zadvydas, Akinwale, or any other binding law suggests the six-month period can expire before detention occurs. Many cases on this exact issue hold the period begins with actual detention. E.g., Cheng Ke Chen v. Holder, 783 F. Supp. 2d 1183, 1192 (N.D. Ala. 2011) (rejecting claim as premature for petitioner who was not detained during removal period because “it defies common sense to suggest that Zadvydas time can run while a petitioner is not in custody”).⁵ Again, Zadvydas “exclusively” addressed “physical confinement and restraint.” Jennings, 583 U.S. at 311.

Here, Popov is in the “post-removal period” under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(6). Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 683. It is “presumptively reasonable” for ICE to detain an individual with that status for a total of six months. Id. at 701. To this day, Popov is still within that reasonable detention period.

A dicta footnote in Akinwale does not alter this outcome. 287 F.3d at 1053 n.3. In part, Akinwale decided whether the action was premature. Id. at 1051-52. There was no doubt it was since petitioner filed four months after he was “taken into custody.” Id. 1051. In dicta and its related footnote, Akinwale stated the six-month term was inclusive of the removal period (i.e., six months in total, not six months on top of the ninety-day removal period). ICE does not dispute that. Instead, Akinwale’s express holding is relevant: petitioner “must show post-removal order detention in excess of six months.” Id. at 1052.

There is no way Popov can make that showing. It is undisputed he has not been in physical detention for six months. As explained, the constitutional detention period cannot start running without some form of constraint. This case is unripe because Zadvydas does not protect against detention that never existed.

Importantly, that six-month period is a bright-line, irrebuttable presumption of constitutionally acceptable detention. See Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 701; Akinwale, 287 F.3d at 1052.⁶ It is only “after” this time that SLRRFF and Zadvydas burden-shifting comes into play. Guzman Chavez, 594 U.S. at 529 (cleaned up); see also Jennings, 583 U.S. at 298-99; *Clark v. (“This six-month period thus must have expired . . . in order to state a claim under Zadvydas.”).

To require detailed justification from ICE before the Zadvydas period expires is a significant infringement on separation of powers principles. Essentially every question related to immigration is “exclusively entrusted to the political branches of government as to be largely immune from judicial inquiry or interference.” Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U.S. 580, 588-89 (1952). This isn’t a recent development. Trump v. Hawaii, 585 U.S. 667, 702 (2018) (“For more than a century, this Court has recognized that the admission and exclusion of foreign nationals is a fundamental sovereign attribute exercised by the Government’s political departments.” (cleaned up)). That power, however, is always “subject to important constitutional limitations.” Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 695. “In these cases, we focus upon those limitations.” Id.

Other principles of judicial review come into play too. Id. at 700. Courts “recognize primary Executive Branch responsibility” in this field. Id. They must also “give expert agencies decisionmaking leeway in matters that invoke their expertise.” Id. Important here, that includes “Executive Branch primacy in foreign policy matters.” Id. These basic separation-of-powers principles “require courts to listen with care when the Government’s foreign policy judgments, including, for example, the status of repatriation negotiations, are at issue, and to grant the Government appropriate leeway when its judgments rest upon foreign policy expertise.” Id.

The Executive branch is attempting to remove Popov. And he is from Russia—a country with a government traditionally hostile to the United States. The Executive's efforts to remove Popov in these circumstances go to the very core of its power to enforce immigration laws and conduct delicate, ever-shifting foreign policy negotiations. See United States v. Texas, 599 U.S. 670, 679 (2023) ("That principle of enforcement discretion over arrests and prosecutions extends to the immigration context, where the Court has stressed that the Executive's enforcement discretion implicates not only normal domestic law enforcement priorities but also foreign-policy objectives." (cleaned up)); Biden v. Texas, 597 U.S. 785, 805-06 (2022) ("That is no less true in the context of immigration law, where the dynamic nature of relations with other countries requires the Executive Branch to ensure that enforcement policies are consistent with this Nation's foreign policy." (cleaned up)). Until Popov's detention raises a constitutional problem—i.e., after six months—the political branches (namely, the Executive) must be permitted to pursue law enforcement and foreign policy objectives without interference.

To find otherwise would demand the Executive explain its constitutionally acceptable actions for the Judiciary to decide if it concurs based on an individual judge's interpretation of current world events. Yet in the American system of delegated, separated powers, coequal branches need not justify to one another the determinations made within their legal discretion. That is especially true where—as here—the law largely entrusts the subject to the Executive alone.

What's more, an interpretation allowing a challenge now grants rights based on the statutory definitions of removal and post-removal periods under 8 U.S.C. § 1231.

But that statute literally specifies it “shall [not] be construed to create any substantive or procedural right or benefit that is legally enforceable by any party against the United States.” Id. § 1231(h). The only way to conclude SLRRFF burden-shifting applies now is by first concluding ICE’s failure to remove within the statutory period somehow entitles Popov to review. Again, that’s atextual.

In short, Popov cannot force the Executive to prematurely litigate SLRRFF.

2. Failure to Cooperate with Removal

When ICE executes a removal order, an alien must comply and assist. Failure to do so results in detention and tolling any Zadvydas time. 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(1)(C).

“Zadvydas does not save an alien who fails to provide requested documentation to effectuate his removal.” Pelich v. INS, 329 F.3d 1057, 1060 (9th Cir. 2003). “The reason is self-evident: the detainee cannot convincingly argue that there is no [SLRRFF] if the detainee controls the clock.” Id. In sum, a Zadvydas claim fails if petitioner holds the “keys to his freedom in his pocket and could likely effectuate his removal by providing the information requested by” ICE. Id. (cleaned up).

The Eleventh Circuit recognizes these commonsense principles. Singh v. U.S. Att’y General, 945 F.3d 1310, 1314 (11th Cir. 2019). Specifically, it reads the plain language of § 1231(a)(1)(C) for what it says—extending the detention period if the alien “fails or refuses to make timely application in good faith for travel or other documents necessary to the alien’s departure.” Id. (citation omitted). If an alien withheld travel documents needed for removal in bad faith, detention continues. Id.

Here, there is no dispute Popov withheld travel documentation in bad faith. He acknowledges that ICE served him with the I-229(a) Warning. (Doc. 1 at 6). That document contained a list of documentation and information that ICE needs to pursue removal. (Ex. 1 at 2). Popov refused to sign that document. (Ex. 1 at 2). Under ICE's understanding, he neither took steps to secure this information nor submitted any documentation.

Popov has no allegations otherwise. He claims to have cooperated by providing information about [his] country of birth and country of citizenship," "fingerprints and other ID," and a "copy of Emergency Motion to Reopen." (Doc. 2 at 3). This unexplained information is only a fraction of what ICE requested. (Ex. 4 at 2). Making matters worse, Popov complains about an alleged discrepancy with his middle name in ICE paperwork. (Doc. 1 at 6). Yet he makes no allegation—nor does he support with evidence—indicating an effort to resolve the obviously crucial information about his correct legal name. And most notably, there are no facts alleged to suggest Popov applied for travel documents from the Russian embassy—as required. (Ex. 1 at 2); Singh, 945 F.3d at 1314.

As explained, the Zadvydas period is on hold until Popov complies with ICE's requests to secure travel documentation for his removal.

3. No Lack of SLRRFF

Even if the Court were to get past those matters, there is no way for Popov to show no SLRRFF exists. See Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 689. At this point, ICE is working toward removal "the reasonably foreseeable future." See id. There are no allegations—much less evidentiary support—to rebut ICE's SLRRFF determination.

Conclusion

For those reasons, the Court should deny the Petition. To the extent that the Court grants any relief, the only proper relief would be ordering the parties to cooperate with promptly pursuing travel documentation—not outright release.
